US gun makers encouraged illegal arms trafficking
of Smith & Wesson, Barrett Firearms, that supplied what it called a “torrent” of weapons used in notorious shootings. Mexico sued several gun makers in a lawsuit filed last October, alleging they assisted in the exports of guns that were subsequently used or recovered in crimes in the country. They made the case that local “cartels” were the purchasers of weapons legally shipped from outside of Mexico. The suit alleged that Mexico was not the final destination of the weapons, as there is no documented evidence of the return of a Smith & Wesson gun, for example, to the United States. Mexico has cited its inability to be compensated for its losses by the companies on the basis of lack of evidence that the gun was sold there.

The lawsuit is the latest in a series of legal actions taken by both governments and individuals to hold gun makers accountable for the actions of their firearms. In 2012, the United States Supreme Court ruled in the case District of Columbia v. Heller that gun control laws are subject to a “presumption of constitutionality.” Since then, a number of states have enacted laws that are stricter than federal law. As a result, gun makers have been forced to implement stricter safety and record-keeping practices. The lawsuit seeks to hold gun makers accountable for the actions of their firearms, and to prevent other cases like this from happening in the future.

QF’s Akhlaquna ambassadors share how the award made them rethink their roles in life

The two ambassadors of Qatar Foundation (QF)’s Akhlaquna Award have shared how the recognition made them reflect on their roles in life after they were announced.

Nada Al Ali and Abdulla Al-Malki al-Ali are students of Qatar University in Education City United event.

“Ethics is a wonderful value that must be present in our daily lives, in all aspects of our lives, including the scientific field. This value is a part of the most important elements of what we do, and I believe that an engineer, a doctor, engineer, businessman, and others must possess this ethic to be active citizens.”

In turn, Abdulla Al-Malki Al-Malki al-Malki added: “In my field of work, and when studying medicine, there are many rules and duties, and being a doctor is an important part of these things, while ethics instils hope in them, and encourages young people to take part in the award by creating meaningful ideas that contribute to the community service.”

“The Akhlaquna Award ambassador, both al-Ali and Abdulla encourage all young people, whether in the Education City United event or not, to participate in the award if they have ideas that they want to contribute to the community service.”

World Bank: 70% of Yemen's population face hunger

The World Bank has warned that 70% of Yemen’s population are at risk of starvation due to the lack of food assistance in the war-ravaged country. The figure has risen to 10 million people in most of the country’s governorates, including 12 million children aged under 5 years and pregnant or breastfeeding women. The United Nations agencies have called for an immediate humanitarian intervention.

A Kuwaiti military-dominated security force said it had deployed asphalt and bitumen tanker, flagged Asphalt Princess, an Omani yesterday named the vessel as the Panama-Oman tanker in the region. The suspected hijacking of a ship in the Gulf of Oman has ended and the vessel is safe, says UK agency.

The conflict in Yemen has left many civilians dead and injured, and has further worsened the already fragile economy. The World Bank has estimated that the war has resulted in $8.5bn. of Yemen's infrastructure losses as a result of the war at about $6.5bn. of Yemen's infrastructure losses as a result of the war at about $6.5bn. of Yemen’s six-year-old war. The conflict's economic impact has pushed more than 80% of Yemenis below the poverty line, the report said in a report.

The conflict has led to a humanitarian crisis, with 3.7mn internally displaced people in Yemen as a result of the war. The World Bank estimated 24.1mn people in need of humanitarian assistance, and 30mn people are at risk of hunger in one of the most vulnerable countries in the world. Yemen's infrastructure has been damaged, and the conflict has led to a devastating humanitarian crisis, with 3.7mn internally displaced people in Yemen as a result of the war.

Australians’ New South Wales state recorded its lowest daily death toll in more than a year on Thursday when lightning struck and killed three people, officials said. The state recorded 12 new cases of the COVID-19 virus, all in the northern half of the state, while the capital city of Sydney recorded no new cases.

The death highlights the risk being Australia’s largest city, which is struggling to contain a COVID-19 outbreak that has affected the northern half of the state, where the rate of infections has doubled in the past week. West Australia has yet to record any new cases.

Health authorities in New South Wales said they were treating the three deaths as unrelated and that the cause of death was being investigated. The public health department said it had been notified of three people being struck by lightning in the state’s northwest region on Thursday morning.

The department said it was working with emergency services and the state’s coroners to determine the cause of death. It did not provide any details about the individuals or the circumstances of their deaths.

The lightning strike was the second in two days in the state’s northwest region. A man was killed in a separate incident on Wednesday when lightning struck his car while he was driving on a rural road.

Officials said the Thursday fatalities were not related to the previous incident and that they were investigating the cause of death in each case.

New South Wales has recorded more than 100,000 cases of COVID-19 since the start of the pandemic, with more than 1,000 deaths. The state has been hit by several outbreaks in recent months, with the latest one linked to a worksite in the state’s northwest region. The outbreak has prompted strict social distancing measures and a vaccination campaign in the affected areas.

Health authorities said they were working to contain the outbreak and that they would continue to monitor the situation closely.

The lightning strikes come as Australia is grappling with a surge in COVID-19 cases, with the state of New South Wales reporting 235 new cases on Thursday. The state has been hit by a second wave of infections, with more than 4,000 cases reported in the past week.

Health authorities have urged residents to get vaccinated and to follow social distancing guidelines to prevent the spread of the virus. They have also recommended avoiding non-essential travel and gatherings to help contain the outbreak.

The lightning strikes are a reminder of the risks associated with the virus, especially for people with pre-existing medical conditions. Health authorities have urged people to seek medical attention if they experience symptoms such as fever, coughing, shortness of breath, or difficulty breathing.

The lightning strikes have also sparked concerns about the impact on the mental health of residents. Mental health experts have urged people to seek support if they are feeling overwhelmed by the situation.

The lightning strikes have also raised questions about the effectiveness of current lightning safety measures. Health authorities have recommended that people stay indoors during lightning storms and avoid being outside.

The lightning strikes have also highlighted the need for better infrastructure and emergency preparedness in the region. Health authorities have recommended that the state government invest in better infrastructure and emergency response systems to help protect residents.

The lightning strikes have also raised questions about the role of climate change in increasing the frequency and intensity of extreme weather events. Health authorities have recommended that the state government take steps to mitigate climate change and reduce the impact of extreme weather events.

The lightning strikes have also raised questions about the potential for lightning to spread the COVID-19 virus. Health authorities have recommended that people avoid being outdoors during lightning storms and seek shelter indoors.

The lightning strikes have also raised questions about the potential for lightning to cause power outages and disrupt essential services. Health authorities have recommended that the state government invest in better infrastructure and emergency response systems to help protect residents.

UK's science and tech imperative

The challenge that China's rise poses to liberal democracies puts a premium on pushing the frontiers of science and technology. Western economies risk falling behind as China and other countries spend more on research and development - often with a focus on biotechnology. And the EU is at risk of being left behind in the race as well. The coronavirus pandemic has underscored the importance of investing in research and development to innovate and compete globally. The UK government has recognized this by committing to an ambitious economic recovery plan, which includes a significant increase in investment in research and development. The government has also announced plans to create a new agency, modelled on the US Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, to fund high-risk, high-reward research projects. This will help the UK to maintain its position as a global leader in science and technology and to contribute to the global effort to address the challenges posed by the COVID-19 pandemic. With the departure of the US from the World Trade Organization, the UK has an opportunity to become a leader in regulatory innovation, including in the framework of the EU's Digital Single Market. The UK has a strong track record in innovation, particularly in the areas of biotechnology and healthcare, and it has the potential to become a global leader in these fields. The government's commitment to increasing investment in research and development will be crucial in realizing this potential.

Belgium swoops on counterfeit cigarette gang

Belgian customs officers have smashed an international counterfeit cigarette gang, removing 300,000 illegal cigarettes and making 53 arrests.

Belgium's national police agency, and the Customs and Excise Service, raided three hotels and an apartment in Brussels, seizing hundreds of millions of euros worth of illicit tobacco.

The gang is accused of smuggling cigarettes into the country through the port of Antwerp, where it was then sold to distributors and wholesalers. The group is believed to have sold more than 500 million cigarettes in Belgium over the past five years.

The police operation was coordinated with Europol, which has been assisting Belgian authorities in the investigation.

The suspect, who is believed to have been involved in the distribution of counterfeit cigarettes, is expected to face charges of fraud and money laundering.

Last protest leader in Belarus dances and smiles

Maria Kolesnikova, the last remaining opposition leader in Belarus, has been freed after being detained for nearly a year. She was caught up in a wave of arrests following protests against the election results.

Kolesnikova, 56, was one of three key opposition figures who were detained last August after rejecting the government's demands that they leave the country. The others, Svetlana Tikhanovskaya and Maria Kolesnikova, were also detained.

Kolesnikova had been sentenced to five years in jail for inciting mass protests and discrediting the state. She was accused of stirring up unrest in the country and refusing to leave.

Kolesnikova was released from prison on Wednesday night after being granted amnesty by President Alexander Lukashenko. She was among several prominent opposition figures who were freed as part of a presidential decree.

Kolesnikova told journalists upon her release that she had been physically and psychologically tortured in prison.

She said: “I have been in prison for almost a year and a half. I have been beaten and tortured. I was subjected to psychological pressure. I was threatened with violence.

Kolesnikova added: “I have been subjected to various forms of pressure, including isolation, deprivation of sleep, solitary confinement, and irregular food intake.

Kolesnikova also criticized the government’s handling of the pandemic, saying that the authorities had failed to provide adequate medical care for prisoners.

She said: “The authorities have failed to provide us with adequate medical care. We were denied access to medical treatment and were not given proper nutrition.”

Kolesnikova was a vocal critic of President Lukashenko and his regime, and had been arrested multiple times in recent years.

She said: “I have been arrested several times for my participation in protests and for expressing my opinions.”

Kolesnikova’s release comes amid growing concerns about the government’s human rights record in Belarus.

The European Union has imposed sanctions on Belarusian officials over alleged human rights abuses.

Kolesnikova’s release is seen as a key victory for the opposition and a potential boost for the country’s democratic movement.
Aspire Zone Foundation signs deal with LuLu Hypermarket

A spire Zone Foundation (AZF)’s sports and events committee and LuLu Hypermarket Qatar (LuLu) have signed a collaboration agreement with Qatar Sportturtle, the official sporting goods retailer of the AZF.

"Our goal is to build a strong and sustainable partnership between LuLu and Aspire Zone. LuLu is committed to support our joint goal of making Aspire Zone and the wider community a true legacy for the region’s sports enthusiasts," Daboul said.

"We look forward to a unique collaboration, LuLu with one of the official sponsors of upcoming events that will be held in Aspire Zone calendar during this year and beyond. We embrace our role in the local and international events and scale up the scope of our work and resources and support all community members," Al-Emadi added.

"We are delighted to sign this collaboration agreement. The Zone has emerged as a world class centre for excellence in promoting sports," he said.

"On it is an honor for us to be associated such a strong brand as LuLu Hypermarket. It is also a great pleasure to our shared commitment to promote sports and a healthy lifestyle. We look forward to moving forward, we will also explore affiliations to cooperate with LuLu to take this relationship even further," he added.
