Raisi says Iran backs moves to lift sanctions but won’t bow to pressure

Tehran's new chief executive, Ebrahim Raisi, took office on August 4 in the face of unprecedented sanctions, with the United States and European nations imposing strict measures against his government. Raisi's ascension to power marks a new chapter in Iran's foreign policy and its relationship with the international community.

Raisi's inauguration took place against the backdrop of a series of international sanctions aimed at preventing Iran from developing nuclear weapons and supporting terrorism. The sanctions have severely impacted Iran's economy, causing inflation and unemployment rates to soar. Despite these challenges, Raisi has vowed to work towards lifting the sanctions and恢复正常化进程.

In his first address as the president of Iran, Raisi stated that the country will not bow to pressures and will continue to pursue its rights. He emphasized the need for dialogue and diplomacy to resolve conflicts and promote regional stability. Raisi also stressed the importance of international cooperation in addressing global challenges such as climate change and terrorism.

The president's speech was met with mixed reactions from the international community. While some countries expressed hope for a return to normalcy, others remained skeptical about the prospects for a comprehensive nuclear deal.

Raisi's inauguration ceremony was attended by leaders from various countries, including Russia, China, and France. The ceremony was marked by a show of support for Iran's new leader, with several countries expressing their commitment to strengthening ties with Iran.

The presidential palace in Tehran was abuzz with activity as Raisi gave his first presidential speech. The ceremony was broadcast live on national television, and thousands of Iranis gathered outside the palace to witness the historic moment.

The new president's speech was a testament to the resilience of the Iranian people, who have endured decades of sanctions and political pressure. Raisi's determination to work towards lifting the sanctions and restoring Iran's place in the international community is a significant development in the country's political landscape.

In conclusion, Raisi's inauguration marks a new era in Iran's foreign policy. The president's commitment to dialogue, diplomacy, and international cooperation is a promising development for the future of the country. However, the road ahead will be challenging, with the international community watching closely to see how Iran will respond to the pressures of the sanctions regime.

Top French court approves Macron’s Covid pass legislation

France’s top constitutional authority has approved a controversial move that will force all French citizens to show proof of vaccination, recovery or a negative test result before entering many public places in order to combat the spread of the coronavirus.

The move, approved in a unanimous vote, means that all French citizens will be required to show proof of vaccination, recovery or a negative test result before entering many public places in France, including bars, restaurants, and public transport. The law will come into effect in August.

The controversial pass, which will become obligatory from August 9, will be presented on a smartphone app called the “Vieilles Pâques” or “Eurêka” app. People will need to show their vaccination status, proof of recovery from COVID-19, or a negative result from a rapid test.

The government has said that the move is necessary to protect France’s health system, which is under strain due to the pandemic. It has also said that the move will help to protect seniors and vulnerable populations.

However, the move has been met with criticism from some quarters, who argue that it is a violation of personal freedom. The move has also been opposed by some far-right political parties, who claim that it is a form of “vaccine apartheid.”

President Emmanuel Macron has said that the move is necessary to protect the country’s health system and economy. He has also said that the move is a temporary measure that will be lifted once the pandemic is over.

Top Irish crime boss arrested

Top Italian crime boss, Vincenzo Milazzo, was arrested in Sicily on Wednesday, Ramesh Vankwani, a parliament member and head of the Italian Civic Guard said.

Vankwani said that Milazzo, who is known as the “boss of bosses,” was arrested in a joint operation by the Italian police and the National Police in Sicily. The operation, which was carried out in the early hours of the morning, resulted in the arrest of Milazzo and several other members of the Cosa Nostra, the powerful mafia organization in Sicily.

Milazzo, who is wanted in connection with several mafia operations in Sicily, was arrested in a hotel in the city of Palermo. He was arrested after being followed by police who had been monitoring him for several weeks.

Vankwani said that Milazzo had been on the run for several years and that his arrest was a major blow to the Cosa Nostra. He said that the arrest was the result of a long and complex investigation that had been carried out by the Italian police and the National Police.

The arrest of Milazzo is a significant blow to the Cosa Nostra, which is one of the most powerful organized crime groups in the world. The Cosa Nostra is responsible for a wide range of illegal activities, including drug trafficking, extortion, and racketeering.

Dangers of endless quantitative easing

Inflation readings in the United States have shot up in recent months, and the Goldman Sachs chief economist recently said that 40% of small-business owners said they could not find workers to fill their low-wage jobs. This is the result of the fiscal stimulus combined with pent-up savings and a sharp drop in the labor force participation rate. These factors, plus the global pandemic's impact on supply chains, have led to the possibility of a new era of stagflation, with high inflation and low growth.

To those who care about the circular economy, the situation is even worse. The circular economy is not just about saving on materials, but also pushing circular-economy principles into economic models. This latter point highlights the circular economy's technical, economic, and political uses, their shared ideology regards nature.

The EU and China might disagree on the circular economy's technical, economic, and political uses, their shared commitment to meaningful action toward a sustainable future remains intact. It is critical that developed economies and emerging economies work together to achieve the 17 UN Sustainable Development Goals.

Given that the EU is a manufacturing powerhouse, it can help to set global standards for product sustainability and influence product design and rules—and management workflows. But it is equally important for the rest of the world to develop globally progressive toward a circular economy. This is why the EU launched the Global Alliance on Circular Economy and Resource Efficiency. It also advocates circular-economy principles across all global negotiations and partnerships with African countries. But, if this effort is not sustained, we must start preparing the way for the conclusion of a decade-long research into the circular-economy concept to take root. Part of the answer lies in how mainstream economic development practices are governed.
Sarah is depicted to have the reaction and exclaimed: “Oh, woe to me! Shall I bear a child in my old age?” (Qur’an, 16:101).

The Qur’an is not a history book, and yet it is the source of many of the stories, events, and characters that have become part of the script for the majority of women in the Muslim world. The Qur’an mentions the names of over 190 women. The story of Sarah, the wife of Abraham, exemplifies the role of women in the context of the Qur’an. She is often referred to as a successful and strong woman who, despite her age, bore a son whom she loved deeply. She is a symbol of faith, obedience, and sacrifice. Women like Sarah are often portrayed in literature and popular culture as role models for Muslim women today. There are many stories in the Qur’an that focus on women mentioned in the Prophets’ histories, sometimes the women are mentioned, in some cases, they are not.

Sarah’s story is one of several that demonstrate the importance of women in the Qur’an. The Qur’an is not only a religious text but also a social and cultural document that reflects the values and beliefs of its time. The stories of Sarah, Hagar, and others illustrate the role of women in society and the challenges they faced. In the Qur’an, women are depicted as equals with men, and their rights and responsibilities are emphasized. This is important because it showcases the values of justice, equality, and respect for women that are central to Islam.

Sarah’s story is relevant today because it demonstrates the importance of women in society and their role in the development of the community. It highlights the value of women’s contributions to the community and the importance of their participation in social, economic, and political affairs. The Qur’an encourages women to be active in their communities and to contribute to their development.

The stories of Sarah and other women in the Qur’an are important because they provide insights into the beliefs and values of the society in which they lived. They reflect the values of justice, equality, and respect for women that are central to Islam and continue to be relevant today.
Qatar Airways grounds 13 Airbus A350s over surface issue on regulator’s direction

Qatar Airways said it has grounded 13 of its Airbus A350 jets at the instruction of the country’s aviation regulator due to the surface below the paint deteriorating faster than expected.

In a statement issued yesterday, the national carrier said, "In addition to its regular checks to ensure the continued safety and security of its passengers and aircraft, Qatar Airways continues to closely monitor the significant condition across its Airbus A350 fleet in which the fuselage surface below the paint is degrading at an accelerated rate.

The airline is working with its regulator to protect all passengers and on this basis, and following the explicit written instruction of its regulator, 11 aircraft have now been grounded, effectively removing them from service until such time as the root cause can be established and a satisfactory solution made available to permanently correct the underlying condition."

Qatar Airways said, "In addition to the airline's focus on protecting its reputation for offering the highest levels of customer experience, Qatar Airways is co-operating with all the leasing companies affected by this A350 grounding who have started to inspect their impacted aircraft.

Qatar Airways Group Chief Executive, HE Akbar al-Baker said, “With the latest development, we sincerely expect that Airbus treats this matter with the proper attention that it requires. Qatar Airways will not accept anything but aircraft that continue to offer our customers the highest possible standard of safety and the best travel experience that they deserve.

Qatar Airways expects Airbus to have established the root cause and permanently corrected the underlying condition to the satisfaction of Qatar Airways and our regulator before we take delivery of any further A350 aircraft.”
