QU faculty gets new patent to remove carbon monoxide from car exhaust

P rof Farah Yousaf Al-A_landizi, a professor of Organic Chemistry at Qatar University’s (QU) College of Arts and Sciences, has got a new patent to remove carbon monoxide emitted through car exhaust by catalytic conversion into less toxic carbon dioxide.

The catalyst reported herein may have potential application as a com- ponent of the three-way catalytic con- verters, she has explained in a state- ment. “The research involves developing a new catalyst that can function as a converter in the method reforming process for fuel cells operating at extreme CO poisoning in carbon dioxide laser eyepieces.”

The catalytic CO/350° F (supra carbon dioxide laser) nanotubes composition constitutes an active and stable catalyst to convert the highly toxic carbon monoxide in exhaust or fuel gas to less toxic carbon dioxide.

“Carbon monoxide is a very toxic gas in the methanol reforming process for fuel cells operating at extreme CO poisoning in carbon dioxide laser eyepieces,” Prof Al-Alandizi said.

“With our catalyst, we can produce at large scale a tunable catalyst through environmentally and economically-friendly approach,” Al-Alandizi added.

Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates have been accused by the United States of using a vast, coordinated social media campaign to spread disinformation about Qatar in an effort to disrupt its economy and undermine its political influence. The campaign, known as Project Azadi, involved the use of social media platforms and pro-Qatar entities to spread false narratives and disinformation. The Saudi and Emirati governments have denied any involvement in Project Azadi, but evidence has emerged suggesting their role in the campaign.

The campaign was launched in 2019 as part of a broader dispute between Qatar and its Gulf neighbors, which has been ongoing since 2017. The dispute began when Qatar was accused of supporting terrorism and was embargoed by its Gulf neighbors, including Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. The sanctions were lifted in 2020, but the tension between the countries remains.

The US lawsuit, filed by a law firm representing the families of the victims of the 2017 attack on the US embassy in Manama, alleges that the Saudi and Emirati governments were behind the campaign. The lawsuit accuses the governments of using social media to spread false narratives about Qatar, including the assertion that Qatar supports terrorism and is a sponsor of radical Islam.

The lawsuit claims that the campaign was coordinated by a network of pro-Qatar entities, including the Qatari royal family, the Qatari government, and a network of pro-Qatar foundations and charities. The lawsuit also claims that the campaign was financed by the Saudi and Emirati governments, and that they provided financial support to the pro-Qatar entities.

The lawsuit seeks damages of $12 billion, and it alleges that the campaign has caused significant harm to Qatar's economy and political influence. It also alleges that the campaign has resulted in the loss of business for Qatari companies and the loss of revenue for the Qatari government.

The lawsuit is significant because it is the first time that a legal action has been taken against the Saudi and Emirati governments for their alleged role in spreading disinformation about Qatar. It is also a rare example of a high-profile legal action against a government for its role in a political dispute.

The lawsuit is likely to be closely watched by observers of the Middle East, and it could have significant implications for the ongoing dispute between Qatar and its Gulf neighbors. It also highlights the growing importance of social media in political disputes, and the role of governments in using social media to influence public opinion.

The lawsuit is also likely to have implications for the future of social media in the Middle East, and the role of governments in using social media to influence public opinion. It could also set a precedent for future legal actions against governments for their role in spreading disinformation.

The lawsuit is a reminder of the growing importance of social media in political disputes, and the role of governments in using social media to influence public opinion. It also highlights the need for greater transparency and accountability in the use of social media for political purposes.

Ambassadors highlight warm ties with Qatar on ASEan Day

By Joey Agulnor

The cordial relations between Qatar and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Association) has highlighted the 54th anniversary celebration of the establishment of ASEAN partnership.

"The ASEAN welcomes the progress on the COVID-19 pandemic, and expresses its appreciation to the efforts of Qatar and the ASEAN countries, in particular, for its contribution in the response to the pandemic," said HE al-Rumaihi.

"This theme portrays ASEAN’s collective commitment to care for its people and prepare for future opportunities and challenges," he added.

"We care, we prepare, we prosper," he underscored.

"The chairmanship of Brunei Darussalam this year, with the goal of ensuring that the whole ASEAN region, Qatar included, has successfully maintained the peace and stability in the South East Asia region," Hassan stated.

"In this regard, we put aside our differences and work together to widen the doors of a more prosperous region," he added.

"We recognize the ASEAN Way," the ambassador stated.

The Asian Day in Doha was attended by diplomats from 10 ASEAN nations, including Australia, Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Thailand, Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, and Myanmar, as well as Qatar’s top officials and dignitaries. The event was also attended by representatives of the ASEAN Community, as well as the Qatari leadership and Indian community in Qatar as the guest of honor.

"The Immunisation project will provide an additional quarter of a million girls," the official said.

"I am deeply honored and humbled by this award," Dr Thomas said. "I dedicate this award to the Indian community in Qatar as well as to my Turkish colleagues, who were instrumental in setting up several initiatives here in Qatar, especially during the early stages of the Covid-19 pandemic situation in Qatar."

"It is also recognition for the Indian community in Qatar as well as a recognition of the support and the commitment of the Indian community in Qatar," the Indian Embassy in Doha said.

"Dr Thomas has worked tirelessly and selflessly for the community here in Qatar and in India," the envoy said.

"He has also worked on global health issues, including the COVID-19 pandemic, and the provision of healthcare in conflict-affected areas."
