The Olympic Games are not about making money, but about a larger mission – to unite the world through sport, International Olympic Committee President Thomas Bach has said.

Bach was speaking in Doha where delegates of about 206 National Olympic Committees gathered for the ANOC General Assembly following the successful completion of Doha 2019 World Cup in football.

He also criticized those who want to see the Olympic Games as a business model, which would only be a very select group of athletes in a select group of countries.

“It is extremely clear, the Olympic Games are not about making money. The Olympic Games are not about monitoring revenues,” he said.

“The Olympic Games are there to accomplish our mission to unite the world through sport, to promote and defend our values. Money for us is just a means to achieve our mission,” he added.

Bach also gave a warning that if the Games became a business model for maximising profits, “we would cease to exist.”

The German 1972 Olympic fencing champion noted that there were athletes from 14 countries at the 1896 Athens Olympic Games and “today we are 206 NOCs.”

“The mission has not changed,” he continued.

He believes the mission of universality, bringing the world together through sport, can only be accomplished if everyone keeps “solidarity, unity and respect in mind.”

“Unity of diversity is essential to the Olympic Movement,” Bach said.

Bach quoted the Olympic Charter which states that the Olympic Games “are not only events to be played by athletes but also by the general public.”

“We can really look forward to being received in Japan with open arms and the Japanese public welcoming all the athletes from all the world,” Bach said.

Bach praised the tremendous work done by the Tokyo Olympic organizing committee committed to making the Olympic Games as Tokyo already is, “the IOC said.

Bach said that the IOC is committed to working with all 206 NOCs to accomplish its collaborative mission, adding that the Tokyo 2020 Olympic Games can act as a conduit for spreading this symbol of unity.

“I refer to the tremendous work written outside his office at the new Olympic House in Istanbul: “change or be changed.”

Will try to make it 3-0, says Saha ahead of Ranchi Test

Wicketkeeping is a thankless job. It’s not easy like that.

“Firstly, it is a hypothetical question. Secondly, it is unfair on me to prejudge a decision. The member of the ad-hoc CAC has to go through the process of coach appointment to decide whether a person is fit to be coach even though the ad-hoc CAC found him guilty of conflict of interest,” DK Jain.

However, the visitors can avoid a series whitewash. They go into the final Test against South Africa with a 3-0 win.
