Bahrain coach Helio Sousa (right) consoles Iraq's Mohamed Majid (centre), who missed the penalty shot during the shoot-out yesterday.

“We have been a great team today and our players gave a high quality performance,” Bahrain coach Helio Sousa said.

“Our players have shown that they can concentrate and come back in the game. We may be unlucky at the time of the shoot-out, but we must be the best and reach the final,” the Portuguese coach added.

Iraqi coach Saadi Qasim (left) said: “We were not able to beat Bahrain and we failed to control well in the defence especially the second goal was a gift at this level,” Saudi Arabia coach Fahad Shalhoub added.

“Bahrain have played six games within 20 days, and the team also suffered several injuries, I think it is an impressive performance.”

Now the final question remains: will Bahrain win their maiden title when they will meet three-time champions Saudi Arabia in the final of the Khaled bin Sultan Lubnan on December 8 or Saudis regain the title after a gap of 15 years.

Billionaire Cohen ‘in talks’ to increase stake in Mets

New York Mets owner Fred Wilpon will reportedly sell another 9% stake in the franchise to Fenway Sports Group, the owners of the Boston Red Sox and Liverpool Football Club.

The Wilpons have been looking to sell a stake in the Mets for several years, and reportedly had discussions with the Fenway Sports Group last year.

The Mets, who have not made the playoffs since 2006, have seen their valuation drop significantly in recent years.

Other potential buyers for the Mets have included the Sterling Partners, the owners of the New York Islanders, and Steve Cohen, a hedge fund manager and owner of the Connecticut Krafts in the NHL.

Cohen, who is reportedly willing to pay between $2.5 billion and $3 billion for the Mets, has expressed interest in purchasing a stake in the franchise.

The deal would reportedly value the Mets at $2.5 billion, up from the current valuation of about $2.2 billion.
