Ireland vs Wales will be clash of bruised egos, says Sexton

‘It was tough for a lot of guys who went into a big game and did not perform’

Ireland captain Johnny Sexton is set to make a landmark 100th Test appearance - he has 93 caps for Ireland and six for the British and Irish Lions.

The prestigious tournaments have taken place behind closed doors in China.

The ITTF, the sport’s world governing body, said in September that players would be banned from travelling outside and those who were symptomatic were not allowed to receive treatment.

Coles said. “We just have to make sure we do not get those red cards.”

The deal ends SANZAAR’s 25-year association with Fox Sports, which is believed to include free advertising in return for providing the best possible broadcasting window.

“New Zealand aim to learn from lessons”

We do a lot of tackling practice in the week. We just have to lower our sights and targets to get those red cards,” Sexton said.

Ireland and Wales have played 16 matches against each other since 2019. The Ireland coaching team has already called on Sexton to prove himself by starting against Wales.

“We just have to be better,” Coles told AFP on the eve of the game.

The full-back said Wales will be between two and three lengths behind Ireland in terms of tackling.

He added that he had been given enough time to find consistency and take their chance against top table tennis players.

It was difficult not playing ta- ble tennis for such a long time. It was said that Tokyo was post- poned. We just want to play against every opponent. We want to win the game from the start, not a drag over from the previous game,” he added.

Sexton said Ireland would not underestimate the quality in the Welsh ranks.

“Very lucky to be here and just enjoy the moment,” said Sexton.

“Obviously it doesn’t feel great that I lost, (but) on the bright side it’s just amazing that I get to be here and to participate in this tournament. I think if all of us have been out of match practice this year, (then) haven’t been any international matches outside a little nervous, little tight.”
