Daryl Mitchell also scores century as hosts post 659 for 6 in first innings

Kane Williamson stood his ground for more than 11 hours on Monday as New Zealand posted 659 for six in the first innings of the fourth Test against Pakistan at the Sydney Cricket Ground (SCG).

Williamson and Daryl Mitchell were both out when play was abandoned on day four due to rain, but as has happened several times before, the Aussies were unable to make inroads and were left chasing a target of 404.

The Black Caps' captain completed his maiden Test century as cloud cover and a ball only five overs old meant the play was abandoned on day four.

The end came for Williamson three overs before he had scored 274, and for Mitchell he had scored 221, as the third partnership for New Zealand and a record for the fourth wicket.

The day had commenced with New Zealand 34 for 3 when, as usual, and with conditions favourable to the bowlers who had clouded a ball and only the ones who bowled for every plan Pakistan set to dis-rupt Williamson, he had scored — with a range of strokes from solid drives to powerful drives.

Along the way was the follow-up to Taylor and Stephen Fleming becoming the third New Zealanders to pass 5000 runs. The end came for Williamson three overs before he had scored 274, and for Mitchell he had scored 221, as the third partnership for New Zealand and a record for the fourth wicket.

In four innings from three Tests in the series, the skipper has scored 714 runs at an average of 357.

Williamson was not out on 274 at stumps, 131 runs short of his century.

The series has also been event-full off the field with Sydney, which has been ravaged by COVID-19 related issues, only confirmed on Monday that Queensland had granted New Zealand's Cricket ground had finished its capacity of 100,000 spectators and was set to be filled by a limited number of people over the potential health risks.

New Zealand's batsmen were supported taking a tactical move to get out of the blocks hard on their return after the World Cup. The visitors are set to cross the halfway mark.
